- Today is Autism Acceptance Day—a chance for all of us to learn, grow, and celebrate the many ways people experience the world.

Autism is a neurodevelopmental difference that affects how some people communicate, socialize, and process information. Every autistic person is unique, and many bring incredible strengths in creativity, music, memory, and problem-solving.

At Argyle, we believe in creating a community where everyone feels seen, valued, and supported. That means listening, being kind, and accepting each other just as we are.

Let's take today as a reminder to celebrate neurodiversity, to ask questions with curiosity and respect, and to keep building a school where all voices belong.
