- Today, April 2nd, is Autism Acceptance Day—a day to recognize and celebrate the diversity of how people think, learn, and experience the world. Autism is part of human diversity. Some autistic students may experience the world differently—through communication, sensory sensitivities, or social interactions—but every student brings unique strengths, perspectives, and talents to our school community. At Argyle, we believe that everyone deserves to feel seen, valued, and like they belong. Today, we invite you to take one simple action: Notice someone who might be on the margins and include them. It could be as simple as saying hello, inviting someone to join you, or showing patience and kindness. Small actions can make a big difference in helping someone feel connected. Let's continue building a school where everyone feels they belong. Thank you, Argyle!
