- Some programs have unique deadlines for applications or supplemental pieces such as auditions, interviews, 2nd application etc., so be sure to check websites early
- Some post-secondary institutions require a Language 11 course (UBC & SFU)
- Most Universities have a minimal math requirement (Precalc 11 or Foundations 12 – check websites as it varies between PSIs)

How to find out more information

- Google search – “University name” + “admission”+“program” (SFU+admission+criminology)

 - Post-Secondary BC virtual event (PSBC) www.postsecondarybc.ca

- Set an appointment to talk to your counsellor after you have attempted some research

Things to consider when choosing your post-secondary path

- Your interests – choose an area that creates a spark of enthusiasm for you
- Location
- Cost
- Class size
- Which prerequisites have you met?
- Campus life – do you like the layout of the campus, and do they offer activities/clubs that interest you?
- Are you interested in a Co-op program?

What to do if you are missing a required course or your grades are not high enough for the program you want to attend?

- 1) Consider starting at Capilano University or one of the local colleges to pick up required courses or improve your grades. You can take upgrading courses through Adult Basic Education free of charge, check out Capilano University ABE courses for more information on one local option. Some other local options are Douglas College, Kwantlen College, VCC, Langara College and BCIT (check their websites for more information)
- 2) Complete a 2-year Associate of Arts or Science degree at one of the schools listed above and then apply to transfer to the University of your choice. Most of your completed courses should transfer and count towards your final degree so this route is not costing you time. Have conversations with academic advisors at these institutions to help you plan your route
- 3) Some programs at certain universities have partnered up with colleges to offer specific Foundation/Preparatory programs that feed into specialized programs (e.g.: nursing, engineering)
